

Missiv # 99 – Creation of Birds
August 2009

Friends - This month of August Karen is on vacation much of the time, so we are not putting a new Missiv on the website. If you haven't read all those that are already on the web we invite you to catch up with reading them, under the Proffecy menu on our website [below]. Instead of a proffecy I share with you here, as a Word docx attachment, a poem I wrote about that marvelous nite singer, the mockingbird. I composed it, with an accompanying tune, while my husband, his mother Nellie and I were traveling cross-country while our 3 small daughters were bouncing about in the back of our big Ford 9-passenger station wagon. This attachment is decorated with one of my photos of a singing mockingbird.

I would have liked to include a tape of the mockingbird singing, from the many bird tapes I recorded in the 80's. Would you like it if I were to start including sound as well as graphics with the Missivs?

My heavenly companions tell me that the whole idea for the invention of birds came from Sophia, the Holy Spirit. The insects had already been invented - in those distant times and worlds - and were multiplying by that time, they say. A natural enemy was needed to keep their numbers in check. Sophia pondered, with the help of men & women friends, and the result that emerged was birds - a creature that would eat insects and would also be a joy to have around.

Speaking of inventions by God &/or gods, in case you haven't heard, modern Bible translators seriously question whether earlier translators had the right to make the Hebrew plural word Elohim into the single word God, or Jehovah, or Yahweh. That's a real stretch of the imagination.

Knowing as we do that God is very generous, and if as that biblical "us" in that sentence indicates [Gen.1:26], he was not alone in heaven when the earth was created, we can figure he would not have hogged all the inventions for himself alone. "Let us make man in our image," Elohim said - a plural. Some say the "us-our" were angels, but that isn't necessarily the case. Perhaps these, he suggested that man be made in their image, were in some cases sons of God, as were those who fathered the Nephilim, a hybrid heaven+earth race [Gen.6:24].

So what my heavenly associates tell me about a woman in heaven, or men & women together there, creating the songbirds - such as the mockingbird - is not at all contradictory to what the Bible says. We can assume God as gentle supervisor & guide, the big boss in the sky. How about the eagles & hawks being the choice of the men mainly, and the songbirds & doves being developed and bred up by the women?

We are having glorious summer weather here in SoCal [southern California] - unusually mild for August. I hope the weather is giving enjoyment to you wherever you are.

Luv, Theo

Theo Halladay's big website: www.wertheliving.org
Religious & Family Guidance, Dispatches from Sheol,
Humor, Animal Stories, Poetry, Songs, Innovative Spelling,
Puzzles, Crafts for Children, The Moberly Saga, Shop